PAPERS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF HISTORICAL RESEARCH
J. FRANKLIN JAMESON, EDITOR

BALTIMORE, MD., U. S. A.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

This volume on the materials for American history contained in the archives of Russia should be conceived of and judged as a part of a series, the sum total of which represents a systematic endeavor, by the Department of Historical Research in the Carnegie Institution of Washington, to make more available for students the materials for the history of the United States which are to be found in foreign archives. In developing this systematic endeavor, the first step in the natural order, if one wishes to serve the interests of as large a number of historical scholars and societies as possible, is to make a general examination of each important foreign archive, and to present a general guide to the material which it is found to contain for the history of the United States, leaving further exploitation, by fuller lists or the printing of texts of documents, to a later time and in part to other agencies.

Of the series of manuals which the complete execution of such a project would require, the Institution has already published several: one for the Cuban archives, by Mr. L. M. Pérez (1907); a brief one for Spain, by Professor W. R. Shepherd (1907), followed in 1916 by a voluminous descriptive catalogue of the papers relating to the present United States in one particular section of the Archives of the Indies at Seville, the so-called "Papeles de Cuba," by Professor R. R. Hill; four volumes for the archives of Great Britain, by Professors C. M. Andrews and F. L. Paxson, Dr. C. O. Paullin, and Dr. F. G. Davenport (1908, 1912, 1914); a manual for the Roman and other Italian archives, by Professor C. R. Fish (1911); one for the German state archives, by Professor M. D. Learned (1912); one for those of Mexico, by Professor H. E. Bolton (1913); one for those of Canada, by Mr. D. W. Parker (1913); and one for the Swiss and Austrian archives, by Professor A. B. Faust (1916). The archives of Paris and of the Netherlands were in course of similar examination when the present European war broke out, the former nearly completed, the latter well begun; the final preparation of the resulting volumes must wait for the conclusion of hostilities.

Very few students of American history have ever made any researches in the archives of Russia. The contribution which the Russian archives can make to that history is nearly confined to two fields, that of the diplomatic relations between Russia and the United States, and that of the exploration of the North Pacific and the settlement of Russian America, now called Alaska. But those two fields are by no means of small importance in our history, and for them the archives of Petrograd and Moscow are replete with materials of the greatest, indeed of indispensable, value. Accordingly

Professor Golder, familiar with the Russian language and with the portions of history involved, and author of a notable work upon Russian Expansion on the Pacific (Cleveland, 1914), was invited to proceed to Russia and to make those examinations of archives of which the following book is the result. His period of sojourn in Petrograd and Moscow embraced several months of the year 1914, from the beginning of March until November, five months immediately preceding the great war, and three months after its outbreak. The data presented in the volume should be understood to be of that year, though in some matters it has been possible to secure later information.

Besides expressing the thanks of the Department of Historical Research to those to whom Professor Golder has made personal acknowledgments in his preface, and especially to Professor Alexander Lappo-Danilevskii, whose kindness has been unwearied, and who has obligingly revised portions of the text, it is a pleasure to commemorate the important service rendered by the late Hon. Curtis Guild, American ambassador to Russia, in obtaining before Dr. Golder's arrival the necessary permissions for his investigations.

J. FRANKLIN JAMESON.

WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 9, 1916.

PREFACE.

This book is the product of some eight months' work in Russia, undertaken at the instance of the Carnegie Institution of Washington and begun in the early days of 1914. The necessary authorizations having been secured, through diplomatic channels, I found the officials of the archives, when I arrived on the field, exceedingly ready and willing to co-operate. They were genuinely interested in the work, feeling that it would be a means of drawing the scholars of the two countries together. I was allowed to examine the diplomatic documents up to 1854 and the papers of the other archives to a much later date.

To an observer at a distance it might seem that the results of the search were less than might have been achieved in eight months, but the working hours are few, the holidays many, and the catalogues either imperfect or non-existent. In some archives many documents are not classified at all and in others they are poorly catalogued. Under such circumstances it would be presumptuous to claim that this book contains everything on American history, but I have tried to note all the material that I could find.

There is no one universally accepted system for the transliteration of Russian names. The one adopted here aims to be phonetic. A few explanations may, however, be helpful. As used here

v = v in Vienna,	shch = shch in cash-chest,
zh = j in the French name Jean,	ui = i in mill,
kh = ch in German Ich,	ie = e in mellow,
tch = ch in children,	iu = u in Ulysses,
sh = sh in shelf,	ia = ya in yard.

In some cases where a given spelling of a name has been almost universally accepted by writers in English, as Romanzoff, Kamchatka, etc., no change from that practice has been attempted.

I am under deep obligations to the archivists and scholars of Petrograd and Moscow for their co-operation, and for personal as well as official favors. Their kindness I shall always remember with pleasure and gratitude. Three of these scholars were particularly kind. Messrs. Serge Mikhailovitch Goriainov and Iakov Lazarevitch Barskov, director and assistant director of the archive of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in addition to aiding me in their archive also made the necessary arrangements for my investigations in other places. Professor Alexander Sergeivitch Lappo-Danilevskii of the Imperial Academy of Sciences gave me freely of his time, scholarship, and influence. Through his efforts a portion of the papers in the Tambov archives was sent to the Academy for my use. I join Russian scholars in wishing that this Guide may help to draw the learned men of the two countries together.

INTRODUCTION.

CONDITIONS OF STUDY.

Permission to Use the Archives. A foreigner desiring to use the official archives must secure authorization from the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs through the representative of his country residing in Petrograd. Each application is considered on its own merits, and although permission is usually granted to persons of approved scholarship, it should not be assumed as a matter of course. It may take some time before the application is acted upon and it would therefore be unwise to set out for Russia until there is definite assurance that access to the archives will be given. This permission is only for the Archive of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Petrograd. If, in addition, the scholar wishes to examine material on his subject found in other places the director of the above mentioned archive will arrange this.

To help the authorities in Russia, the applicant should state clearly and definitely the subject and period he wishes to investigate, the object in view, and when he plans to arrive. The application should be accompanied by credentials from men and institutions of learning as to the character and standing of the applicant.

Facilities for Study. When the scholar has arrived on the field he will find the archivists very willing to co-operate with him. On the whole there is little red tape. Unfortunately the physical facilities are not everywhere adequate. The primary purpose of the government archives is to preserve the documents for official use. Scientific investigation is a secondary matter, especially so far as foreigners are concerned, for not many of them come. It is therefore not surprising that no special arrangements are provided. In some cases there is no room for an extra table, and only by crowding is an additional place made.

Time. The greatest drawback, however, is not the want of space, for the officers of the archive will often inconvenience themselves to accommodate the stranger, but the lack of time. Church and civil holidays follow each other in rapid succession, and make many days unavailable. Moreover, the archives are open only for a few hours each day, never more than five, usually from 11 a. m. to 4 p. m., and sometimes only two, 1 p. m. to 3 p. m. This is the winter schedule. In summer it is worse, for then the officers go away on their vacations and the hours of work are reduced. The result is a peculiar situation: in the winter time the hours are longer, but there is little daylight; in summer the hours are short, though daylight lasts long. Were it not for the numerous holidays during the spring months that season would be the best for investigation.

General Considerations. For the same standard of living one must pay more at Petrograd and Moscow than in other European cities. Since the hours of work are few and holidays many, the question how to utilize with profit the spare time becomes important. There are museums with rare and valuable collections, but they are open and closed during the same times as the archives. In summer time nearly all public institutions are closed, the scholars and artists are gone, and the cities are hot and dusty places to live in, though the summer nights at Petrograd are delightful. Life in these two Russian cities is not, however, without its pleasures and compensations. For reasons which it is not necessary to discuss here, the educated classes in Russia are drawn more closely together than in other countries. If the foreign investigator is willing and has the qualifications for friendship, the Russian scholars will meet him more than half way. They will invite him to their homes and ask him to their tables. They will place at his service their learning, their collections, and their ideas. Their simple living and high thinking, their culture and refinement, charm one because sincere and unpretentious. To be associated with this circle for any length of time repays one for many of the inconveniences to which reference has been made.

THE HISTORY OF THE RUSSIAN ARCHIVES.¹

The history of Russian archives is similar to that of archives in other European countries. With the introduction of Christianity there came to be monasteries and other centres of learning, such as Kiev, where Greek books and manuscripts were collected. It is said that in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries there was a library at Rostov and a fairly good one at Vladimir, especially in the last mentioned place, where there were more than one thousand books, many of which were copied and others translated into Russian.

By the middle of the sixteenth century Moscow was noted for her large collection of books and manuscripts. But the archives were not properly cared for, the manuscripts being kept in bags and boxes, of which there were not less than two hundred and thirty-one. As might be expected, these documents suffered from wars, fires, and dampness. There are cases reported where the keepers of these collections were ordered to destroy the oldest records in order to make room for the newer. Mention should also be made of the library, and collection of manuscripts, formed by the metropolitans, and later patriarchs, of Moscow (Sinodalnaia Bibliotheka). The beginning of printing in Russia (Moscow, 1564) did not displace copying, which held its own until the time of Peter the Great and, to a smaller extent, even for a time longer.

Collecting manuscripts and antiquities for historical purposes was little thought of before Peter's day. It was he who interested himself in such matters. He sent a request to the monasteries, churches, governors, and others to send him their books, manuscripts, and letters. No haste was made to comply with the emperor's wish. To help matters, the Senate sent special officers to the monasteries and other such places, to find out what material they had and to assure those in authority that as soon as the manuscripts and books were copied they would be returned. As usually happens in such cases, when it became known that Peter was interested in manuscripts and antiquities, private individuals imitated him, and as a result when Peter died there were several notable collections.

In 1734 the Imperial Academy of Sciences (established in 1725) asked permission of the Senate to publish the recently acquired material. The matter was referred to the Synod; that body reported that "to publish history would be a waste of paper and money, because in books are many lies which lead people astray". It should, however, be said to the credit of the Synod that about fifty years later it began the publishing of historical documents. It went further, and in 1791 made an appeal to monasteries and churches for manuscripts, and many responded. When Paul I. came to the throne he requested that all these documents should be returned to the places from which they had come. In this way many documents, in being transported from Petersburg to Moscow, were lost or damaged.

One cannot discuss the history of Russian archives without speaking of Gerhard Friedrich Müller. He came to Russia in 1725 as a young man and lived there until he died in 1783. When Bering started on his second expedition Müller accompanied him to Siberia, where he spent ten years collecting valuable historical material which was deteriorating for lack of care. On his return he used this material for his Sammlung Russischer Geschichte. He was made secretary of the Imperial Academy of Sciences, and while occupying this position he did much to collect and publish historical documents. In 1766 Catherine II. appointed him director of the Moscow Archive of Foreign Affairs. From that time until the end of his life he was a tireless worker in the cause of historical research.

Müller was not only a scholar, but he had the enviable gift of inspiring others with a love of scholarship. His students, the men who had been trained by him, took up his work of collecting and editing. During the second half of the eighteenth century there were many other scholars interested along the lines of work in which Müller was engaged. Among these should be mentioned B. N. Tatishchev, I. G. Stritter, M. M. Shcherbatov, I. N. Boltin, N. N. Bantysh-Kamenskii, I. I. Golikov, F. A. Tumanskii, V. G. Ruban, M. D. Tchulkov, A. I. Musin-Pushkin, the metropolitan Platon, and N. M. Karamzin.

Among private and scholarly collectors Count Nikolai Petrovitch Romanzoff¹ stands above any other Russian. He was born in 1754. At the age of 18 Catherine II. took him into court. Then followed three years of study and travel in different parts of Europe in the company of Baron Grimm. On his return he entered the diplomatic service. When Paul I. came to the throne he made him senator. Alexander I. appointed him Minister of Commerce, promoted him (in 1807) to Minister of Foreign Affairs, and (in 1809) to the office of Chancellor.

Romanzoff very early acquired an appreciation for literature and history, and his official positions gave him opportunities to promote the cause of scholarship. As Minister of Commerce he became interested in the history of Russian commerce and began a collection of coins and other material relating to the subject. When at the head of the Foreign Office he made a search for manuscripts and other literary material that would throw light on the diplomatic history of his country. His agents examined the archives of Europe for the accounts by foreign diplomats and others respecting Russia. A commission was organized to publish historical documents, and Romanzoff paid the larger part of the expense attached to the work.

At the conclusion of the Napoleonic wars he retired into private life and gave all his time and fortune to promote science and scholarship. He sent an expedition to the North under Captain Kotzebue to look for a passage from the Pacific to the Atlantic; and in many other ways promoted scientific investigation. The material in the Museum at Moscow which bears his name is a silent witness to his efforts in that direction.

The conducting of scientific expeditions he left to others, but the gathering of books, manuscripts, and antiquities of various kinds Romanzoff took under his own supervision. He limited his field largely to material relating to Russia, the Slavic countries, and Northern Europe as a whole. He and his agents travelled to various parts of the empire, buying libraries and copying rare books and manuscripts. In 1823 Romanzoff, then nearly 70 years of age, went to the Caucasus and the Crimea to make a study of the archaeology of those regions. In every important literary centre of Europe he had correspondents and friends who assisted him. In Russia men of similar tastes, like the metropolitan Evgenii, co-operated and aided him.

In 1861 his rare and valuable collection was moved to Moscow, and it now forms a part of the Romanzoff Museum. When that institution was taken over by the government it contained 710 manuscripts in European and Asiatic languages, a number of them dating back to the twelfth century, and 28,200 printed books of great value in various tongues.

THE ARCHAEOGRAPHICAL EXPEDITION AND THE ARCHAEO- GRAPHICAL COMMISSION.

The admirable efforts of Romanzoff encouraged others in a desire to undertake work along the same lines. One of these men was P. M. Stroeve, who had worked with Romanzoff. He no doubt realized that there was a great deal of wasted labor and saw ways of improvement. In 1823 he proposed to the Historical Society of Moscow that a systematic survey of the whole empire should be undertaken with the view of locating and cataloguing the historical material. He urged that it was hardly worth while to publish anything on hand because documents to be discovered later might prove to be more trustworthy. His recommendations were coldly received and in some quarters they were regarded as visionary and impracticable. A few, however, saw his point of view and promised to help. On the strength of this he proceeded to examine and catalogue the library of St. Sophia at Novgorod, where he found 3000 books and 1089 manuscripts, among which were several of the twelfth century. From St. Sophia he went to other places. At the same time he continued urging his former propositions, and enlisted Romanzoff in his cause, but the latter died in 1826 and the promised support came to nothing.

Soon, however, Stroeve's enthusiasm and industry began to bring him friends. In 1828 the Imperial Academy of Sciences voted him a sum of 10,000 rubles and gave him two helpers for the purpose of examining manuscripts, coins, and archaeological material of all kinds. This was the beginning of the Archaeographical Expedition. Its members set out from Moscow in March, 1829, provided with letters from the government and the Holy Synod which would open doors to them. Between 1829 and 1834 about two hundred archives and libraries were investigated in various parts of Russia. Manuscripts were found in cellars and barns. Many rare and valuable documents were brought to light, though some were in so bad a state of decomposition that they could not be saved.

In 1832 Stroeve made a report to the Academy and submitted some of the newly discovered material. In 1834 the Ministry of Education, acting on the basis of this report, organized the Archaeographical Commission to publish the collection made by the Archaeographical Expedition. Two years later, February, 1837, the commission was reorganized. A fund of 40,000 rubles for the publication of chronicles came from Romanzoff's estate.

Stroev's success was not without a sting; for some reason known to the politicians he was removed from the chairmanship and appointed to a subordinate position. As a consequence he resigned, but unofficially assisted the commission. The work of publishing and examining archives was continued not only in Russia, but in the archives of foreign countries. As the labors of the commission became better known more support was given it and its work expanded.

One of the indirect results of this commission was the organization of local societies in different parts of the empire for the purpose of collecting and publishing material on history, ethnography, archaeology, and other scientific subjects.

LEARNED SOCIETIES.

There are a number of very good historical societies in Russia, but only a few may be mentioned here. Nearly every important city and university has an organization for the purpose of studying history, archaeology, or one of the many social sciences. The first and most important is the historical department of the Academy of Sciences, established when the Academy was founded. In 1758, under the guidance of Müller, the Academy established the Ezhemiesiatchniia Sotchinieniia (the Monthly Publication), devoted to historical and ethnographical subjects. Since that time members of the Academy have made many notable and well-known contributions to historical science.

Aside from the Academy the first learned historical society was the Volnoe Rossiiskoe Sobranie, organized in the University of Moscow in 1771. It had collected and published six volumes of documents by 1783, when it went out of existence. In 1804 members of the University of Moscow formed a real historical society, Obshchestvo Istorii i Drevnostei Rossiiskikh (Society of Russian History and Antiquities). It struggled along until 1812, when the great fire of that year destroyed its library and archives. But in 1815 it took a new lease of active and useful life, and began the publication of its Zapiski i Trudy (Notices and Studies). In 1846 the society established a periodical, Tchtenia v Obshchestvie Istorii i Drevnostei Rossiiskikh (Papers of the Society of Russian History and Antiquities), and this publication has appeared more or less regularly ever since.

Another very important organization is the Imperatorskoi Russkoi Istoricheskoi Obshchestvo (Russian Imperial Historical Society), founded at St. Petersburg in 1866. It has the co-operation and support of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and with its assistance has gathered material relating to Russia in foreign archives. The society publishes the Sbornik Imperatorskago Russkago Istoricheskago Obshchestva (Collection of the Russian Imperial Historical Society).

Other publications which deserve special mention are the Russkaia Starina, Istoricheskii Viestnik, and Russkii Arkhiv.

If this were the proper place it would be a pleasure to discuss more fully the work of these and other scholarly historical societies and publications. Excellent work is being done. Unfortunately foreign scholars, ignorant of the Russian language, are not in a position to profit by the efforts of the Russian investigators. They are often ignorant not only of the language, but also of the existence of this material, and that some of it is in languages known to them. Even Russian historians are often at sea because there are no really trustworthy and recent bibliographical guides for the printed material, to say nothing of the unprinted.

ARCHIVES IN PETROGRAD (COUNCIL, SENATE, SYNOD).

ARKHIV GOSUDARSTVENNAGO SOVIETA.

(ARCHIVE OF THE COUNCIL OF THE EMPIRE.)

This body had its beginning in 1768, at the time of the war between Turkey and Russia. Catherine II. formed a council to take charge of matters relating to the war, and she presided over many of the sessions. It was not intended that it should become a permanent body, but in the year following the empress reorganized it and increased its power so that matters relating to war and peace, political and internal affairs came under its control. At first the minutes of the session were rather brief, but after 1787 they were more full. In 1801 Alexander made the Council to consist of twelve members, over whom he presided. In 1810 it was once more transformed and its functions limited largely to internal affairs. Church affairs in Alaska and the question of granting a charter to the Russian American Company were usually discussed in this body. Disputes between that company and citizens of other powers also came under its jurisdiction.

This archive is at the present time housed in a modern building facing the Hermitage. It is probably the only archive in Russia where all the documents are card-catalogued and kept in metallic vaults. In addition, the officers are publishing a descriptive catalogue of the documents, under the title Opis Del Arkhiva Gosudarstvennago Sovieta (Description of the Papers in the Archive of the Council of the Empire). This publication is to have twenty-two volumes, fifteen of which are already completed (St. Petersburg, 1908-). Many of the manuscripts are also being published under the name Arkhiv Gosudarstvennago Sovieta (Archive of the Council of the Empire); sixteen volumes, including indexes, have already appeared (St. Petersburg, 1869-). Although there are not many papers here having to do with America in general, the few that relate to Alaska are important for the history of the Russian American Company.

DIELO GOSUDARSTVENNAGO SOVIETA. OBSSHCHAGO SOBRANIIA.

(Paper of the Council of the Empire. General Session.)

1811. No. 2. Question whether Russia should open trade relations with the Spanish American Colonies. 16 ff.
1813, 1814. Nos. 1, 11 (in one bundle). Case of H. Barber v. Russian American Company relating to the ship Myrtle (?) which Baranov bought from Barber at Kodiak in 1806. 27 ff.

 1861, No. 84; 1864, No. 239; 1865, No. 195; 1866, No. 86. All these papers have to do with the new charter and other matters relating to the Russian American Company. Important documents. 1000 ff.
 1870, No. 15; 1871, No. 167; 1872, No. 412; 1874, No. 468. Church affairs in Alaska. 60 ff.

ARKHIV PRAVITELSTVUIUSHCHAGO SENATA.

(ARCHIVE OF THE RULING SENATE.)

This archive, like the Senate itself, dates back to the time of Peter the Great, who ordered that all ukases should be classified and published. There are about four million documents, covering numerous fields; a few antedate the nineteenth century. Many of the decrees have appeared in the various editions of the Polnoe Sobranie Zakonov (Complete Collection of Laws). After the taking of Warsaw the papers relating to the internal affairs of Poland were deposited in this archive. There is a fairly complete printed catalogue by Baranov for all the papers between the years 1704 and 1762. More recently several other catalogues have appeared, covering certain classes of documents for short periods. The great mass of material is recorded in manuscript catalogues, one or more for each year, but without indexes. The material for American history has to do wholly with Alaska. The printed catalogues are the following. For a fuller account of them see the section on publications of the Senate archives in Istoriia Pravitelstvuiushchago Senata (St. Petersburg, 1911), V. 88-92.

Arkhiv Pravitelstvuiushchago Senata: Opis Vuisotchaishim Ukazam i Povelieniiam, 1704-1762 (Archive of the Ruling Senate: Description of Imperial Orders and Decrees), 3 volumes of text and 2 of index. Editor, P. Baranov. (St. Petersburg, 1872-1878.)

Senatskii Arkhiv (Senate Archive), 15 volumes. (St. Petersburg, 1888-1913.) These books contain extracts and whole documents on various subjects from 1732 to 1765.

Opis Dokumentov i Diel Khraniashchikhsia v Senatskom Arkhivie (Description of the Documents and Acts in the Archive of the Senate).

Section 1. Papers and decrees of the emperor, etc. Volumes I. and II., 1703-1725. (St. Petersburg, 1909-1910.)

Section 2. Papers and decrees of the Senate. Volumes I. and II., 1797-1803. (St. Petersburg, 1909-1910.)

Section 3. Papers of the procurator general and ministry of justice. Volumes I. and II., 1797-1799. (St. Petersburg, 1910-1911.)

An additional section of this series is entitled Otchestvennaia Voina i Kampanii (War and Campaign in Defense of the Fatherland), 1813-1815. (St. Petersburg, 1912.)

ARKHIV SVIATIEISHAGO PRAVITELSTVUIUSHCHAGO SINODA.

(ARCHIVE OF THE HOLY RULING SYNOD.)

The archive dates back to 1721, but it has documents from the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. In addition to a valuable collection on church history in general, the archive contains material on the imperial family, missions, Protestant and Catholic churches, censorship, schools, monasteries, heresies, confiscated literature, images, marriage and divorce. The library has a good collection of books, many of them rare. In 1866 a commission was appointed to put the archive in order. Since then a number of catalogues and calendars have appeared in print, and others are in manuscript and indexed. One of the peculiarities of this archive is that many documents, usually relating to the same subject, covering a long period of time, are tied together in one bundle which bears the date of receipt of the first document. For example, a package of papers marked 1793 may have a document of 1825, which fact can be determined only by searching through the whole bundle. Nearly all of the material on American history has to do with the missions in Alaska and, since 1870, with the activity of the Orthodox Church in America as a whole.

ARCHIVES IN PETROGRAD (STATE, FOREIGN AFFAIRS).

GOSUDARSTVENNUI ARKHIV I PETROGRADSKII GLAVNUII ARKHIV MINISTERSTVA INOSTRANNIKH DEL.

(THE ARCHIVE OF THE STATE AND THE PETROGRAD PRINCIPAL ARCHIVE OF THE MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.)

These are two distinct archives but under one director and in the same building and rooms.

Archive of the State. Early in the reign of Alexander I. there was already a movement on foot to organize an archive of state, and a law to that effect was passed in 1809. Officially the archive dates, according to Ikonnikov, from 1829, when an attempt was made to take from the archive of foreign affairs documents relating to the imperial family, and the like. When the archive was fully organized many other materials, proceeding from various archives and collections, were added. At the present time the archive contains the papers from the time of Peter the Great, arranged in many sections: in the first are those relating to the imperial family, from Peter I. down, and in the second those relating to secret affairs of the empire—conspiracies, insurrections (Pugatchev, etc.), manifestoes, secret societies, exiles, Poland, etc. Some of these documents go back as far as the beginning of the reigning family.

The diplomatic papers of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs are kept in two archives. Everything up to 1801 is at Moscow, everything from that date to the present at Petrograd.

The Principal Archive or archive of foreign affairs at Petrograd is divided into: (1) the Chancery of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; (2) the Section of Asiatic Affairs; and (3) the Section of Internal Relations. The Chancery of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is subdivided into: (1) correspondence of that minister with the authorities in the empire—the emperor, cabinet ministers, and others; (2) correspondence between the minister and the Russian diplomatic agents abroad, classified according to the place of residence of the minister, as Washington, Paris, etc., and (3) correspondence between the minister and the representatives of foreign powers living in the Russian capital, labelled according to the country of the minister, France, États-Unis, etc.

There is a loose-leaf manuscript catalogue for the documents from 1801 to about 1845 or 1850. It is by no means complete. After that date it becomes more difficult to find one's way. In the Asiatic Section there is a handwritten card catalogue, for the Archive of State a general alphabetical index, and for the Section of Internal Relations a large volume in which a record is kept of the material on hand. To what extent these last-mentioned catalogues are complete there was no opportunity of ascertaining. Much of the diplomatic correspondence leading up to the Convention of 1824 is missing. In some cases the cover, in which the document was kept, is all that is left, with a note stating what it had contained. No one seems to know where the missing papers are. After Tuyll's departure from Washington the diplomatic papers are not of great interest or importance, but consist in large part of second-hand information about American politics and South American affairs.

There are two printed catalogues, and others in preparation, by Mr. S. M. Goriainov, till lately director of the archive.

Dokumentui Gosudarstvennago i S. Peterburgskago Glavnago Arkhivov (Documents in the Archive of State and the St. Petersburg Principal Archive), part I. being a calendar of documents for the year 1812, more than 15,000 in number, part II. texts of documents of exceptional importance. (St. Petersburg, 1912, pp. 562, 182.)

Middleton to Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

- Feb. 27/Mar. 11. No. 688. United States has requested Colombia and Mexico not to interfere in Cuba and Porto Rico. United States is satisfied that Spain should continue in Cuba, but is opposed to transfer of Cuba to some other power; neither does the United States desire that these islands shall become dependencies of Mexico or Colombia. But if Spain insists on fighting, the United States will not feel justified in preventing attacks on these islands, and if the war should become cruel, etc., the United States may even interfere. Spain must be made to see that she must conclude peace. (Enclosed are copies of a note from Clay to the minister of Colombia, with translation.) 4 pp.

ARCHIVES IN PETROGRAD (OTHER MINISTRIES).

VOENNO-UTCHENYI ARKHIV GLAVNAGO SHTABA.

(MILITARY-HISTORICAL ARCHIVE OF THE GENERAL STAFF.)

This archive is very rich in historical material, not only on matters relating to war but also on diplomatic, internal, and to a considerable extent on naval affairs. Its collection of maps, charts, drawings, plans, copper plates, etc., exceeds 2,000,000 pieces, some of them being very old and rare. For the cartography of Alaska and the North Pacific coast there is a large number of very valuable manuscript maps and charts. Among the naval papers one finds notices about Paul Jones; but outside of that there is little else that relates to America. The maps and charts are catalogued and classified under ten headings, or sections. Our material is in sections VII. and X.

SECTION VII.

- 1690(?). No. 342. Map of Eastern and Northern Siberia and the Chinese frontier. (Interesting.) 4 by 4 ft.¹
1740(?). No. 360. Northeastern Asia. 8 by 6 ft.
1746. No. 344. Siberia with indications of the American Coast and the discoveries of Bering and Tchirikov. 10 by 4 ft.
1746-1800(?). No. 46. Atlas containing many interesting manuscript maps relating to America, China, and the Arctic.
1779. No. 1126. Northeastern Siberia and Northwestern America. 2 by 1 ft.
1780(?). No. 361. Northeastern Asia and the Aleutians. 3 by 2 ft.
1780(?). No. 387. Northeastern Siberia and Northwestern America. 2 by 2 ft.
1797. No. 385 (b). Map of Northeastern Siberia, extending from the Lena, and Northwestern America. 4 by 3 ft.
1797. No. 385 (B). Northeastern Asia and Northwestern America. 10 by 6 ft.

SECTION X.

- 1728 or later. No. 866. Map drawn up in connection with Bering's first expedition, from Tobolsk to East Cape. 6 by 2 ft.
1730. No. 566. Bering's report to the empress upon his first voyage. (Note-book of about 34 pages, neatly written in Russian. It has already been published by the War Department.)
1738-1739. No. 832. Spanberg's chart of his voyage from Okhotsk to Kamchatka and to Japan. 2 by 4 ft.
1739(?). No. 833. Chart marking routes of Spanberg and Walton to Japan. 2 by 3 ft.
1740. No. 532. Chart of Avatcha Bay. 1½ by 1½ ft.
1741 or later. No. 531. Chart of Eastern Siberia and the American coast opposite Tchukotski Cape, drawn after the journals of Bering in 1728, and Phedorov in 1732; has also a number of islands discovered by Bering and Tchirikov in 1741. 2 by 3 ft.

- 1741(?). No. 894. Map of Eastern Asia and Northwest America (which extends westward almost to the Koluima). 3 by $2\frac{1}{2}$ ft.

ARKHIV MORSKAGO MINISTERSTVA.

(ARCHIVE OF THE MINISTRY OF THE MARINE.)¹

In 1704 Peter the Great organized this archive and gave it an archivist and a copyist. Very little more was done to make it more efficient, except in 1798, when an assistant archivist was added, until 1827. At that time more assistants were appointed and a large sum of money was appropriated to put the archive in order. In 1873 a special commission was appointed to continue the work of classification and the making of a descriptive catalogue. Ten volumes of this catalogue have already appeared in print. Towards the end of the nineteenth century the commission was brought to an end, the money appropriated elsewhere, and consequently the force was greatly reduced. As a result there is still a large mass of material practically untouched. The number of documents is in the neighborhood of a million, a few dating back to the middle of the seventeenth century. There are many metallic cases in which the more important papers are kept.

The classification is without much system. Instead of being arranged according to subject or in chronological order, the documents are classified under the names of the men at the head of the ministry or the men at the head of the special work assigned, or the particular bureau to which the matter was referred.

For students of American history the papers relating to the Bering voyages and the other explorations in the waters of Alaska are important. There are 111 volumes of bound documents, some of them of large size, under the title, "Papers of Captain-Commander Bering". All these volumes do not, however, relate to Bering alone; many relate also to Siberia and to the other expeditions in the North Pacific. The mass of this material is out of proportion to its importance, because of the numerous duplicates and triplicates and other papers of little value. One has to wade through many pages to obtain the essentials. Fortunately there is a manuscript catalogue which gives a fairly good description of each volume.

(ARCHIVE OF THE HYDROGRAPHIC SECTION OF THE MINISTRY OF MARINE.)

Although in the same building, this archive is distinct from the Archive of the Ministry of Marine in that it has a staff and quarters of its own. There is no logical reason or scientific basis for this division. In theory the hydrographic archive has the log-books and all the maps and charts of the navy department. It is an unusually rich collection and very complete. In connection with this archive there is a valuable library on subjects relating to the navy, books on travel, and old and rare atlases.

ARKHIVI MINISTERSTVA PHINANSOV.

(ARCHIVES OF THE MINISTRY OF FINANCE.)

The Ministry of Finance was organized in 1802. As its functions increased it was divided up into bureaus. Partly as a result of this there is no one central archive but a number of them, each bureau having its own. These archives have much material on the financial history of Russia from the time of Peter the Great. Until quite recently commerce and industry were also under this ministry, but these are now under the new Ministry of Commerce and Industry. In some of the bureaus one may find printed catalogues covering a small portion of their material, but the greater number of bureaus have not even that. American historical material is mainly in the archive indicated below.

ARKHIV GORNAGO DEPARTAMENTA.

(ARCHIVE OF THE MINING BUREAU.)

First Division, First Table: Gold Section.

- 1862. No. 50/23. Letter from the Russian minister at Washington to the effect that gold discoveries in Oregon and British Columbia would indicate that there might be gold in Alaska. 5 pp.
- 1865. No. 145. (Papers from the third table, Division of Inspection.) Professor Whitney, geologist of California, has had a talk with Stoeckl, the Russian minister in Washington, and said that he believed that gold and other minerals existed in Alaska because the formation of that country is the same as the other parts of the North Pacific. Stoeckl advises the Russian government to send Whitney to Alaska to investigate. (The matter was laid on the table until other Alaska questions were settled. In 1869 the subject was regarded as closed.) 6 pp.

1870. No. 5/1. Report that the schooner John Bright of San Francisco, Captain Scott, has gone to Siberia to look for gold; another party has left for the Commander Islands for fur. 7 pp.

ARKHIV GLOVNOE UPRAVLENIE ZEMLEUSTROISTVA I ZEMLEDEILIIA.

(ARCHIVE OF THE GENERAL DIRECTION OF LAND ORGANIZATION AND AGRICULTURE.)

Officially this archive dates back to 1838, when the Ministry of Imperial Domains was established. In 1894 the name of the ministry was changed to General Direction of Land Organization and Agriculture. At various times papers from the Senate, especially for the period 1763-1782, from the Ministry of the Interior, 1793-1803, and Ministry of Finance, as well as other institutions have been transferred to this archive. In addition this archive has valuable papers of the seventeenth century dealing with the Jesuit estates in Poland. The publishing of a descriptive catalogue has been begun and several volumes have already appeared. There is a general sketch in P. Shaphranov, Arkhir Ministerstva Zemledeiliia u Gosudarstvennikh Imushestv (St. Petersburg, 1904, pp. 247). For American history there is little material.

- 1798-1799. No. 1507. Question of introducing into Russia from America the sugar maple. 24 pp.
1810. Governor-general Pestel of Siberia and others recommend that the Russian American Company cut ship-building timber elsewhere than at Okhotsk, since the company has already destroyed the best timber for that purpose near Okhotsk. 6 pp.
- 1842-1854. No. 25218. Experiments made with a certain kind of American rye have not been successful. This grain has been known in Russia as Egyptian or Polish wheat. 14 pp.
- 1843-1844. No. 27052. A discussion of certain articles in the new charter of the Russian American Company. 19 pp.

ARCHIVES OF THE RUSSIAN AMERICAN COMPANY.

During his stay in Russia the writer made special efforts to find the archives of the Russian American Company, but without success. He, however, learned something about them. Letters in the Ministry of the Marine show that on February 25, 1870, the Russian American Company offered its archives, both those in St. Petersburg and those in the colonies, to that ministry. The offer was referred to the proper authorities for consideration. On March 25 and 27 of the same year, it was reported that the papers of the Russian American Company, in the colony and to some extent in St. Petersburg, were packed in boxes and barrels and there was no way of determining their importance. But one of the officers of the company said that these papers were largely account-books and that they contained nothing of special interest. In St. Petersburg the company's archive, he reported, was also made up in great part of such material and there was no descriptive catalogue except for the later years. He went on to say that the archive would make forty wagon-loads and that it would cost from sixty to one hundred rubles to transport it to the Ministry; and this expense the company was not willing to take upon itself. The archive of the Ministry of the Marine had no money with which to pay for the carting of the papers. In addition, the report goes on to say, to put these papers in order, a special commission would have to be appointed to examine and classify them and the staff would have to be increased. All of this would take money and the archive of the Ministry has no such funds at its disposal. Therefore it was concluded that, taking all these points into consideration, it would be better not to accept the archives.

From the Ministry of the Marine the Russian American Company turned to the Ministry of Finance, Section of Commerce and Industry. On March 23, 1871, the company inquired if it might hand over some of the documents. In reply of April 8, the company was informed that the Section of Commerce and Industry would be willing to take over the papers having an historical value. On April 18 the company submitted a list of thirty-four documents which it regarded as important, and these documents were accepted, it would seem, for in a letter of January 16, 1874, from the Section of Commerce and Industry to the Asiatic Section of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, it is stated that a number of the Russian American Company's papers are in the possession of the former. The following month, February 6, there came a request from the Russian Geographical Society to permit Alphonse Pinart (agent of H. H. Bancroft) to consult the papers of the Russian American Company. After some correspondence with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Section of Commerce and Industry the necessary permission was granted to Pinart on March 20, 1874. This is the last record of the papers. The archivists of the Section of Commerce and Industry made a special search for these documents in the summer of 1914 without finding a single one of them. The documents have disappeared without leaving even a trail behind them.

From various reliable sources the writer has been informed that in the hands of many of the descendants of members of the Russian American Company there are papers bearing on Alaska and the history of the company.

IMPERATORSKAIA PUBLITCHNAIA BIBLIOTEKA.

(IMPERIAL PUBLIC LIBRARY.)

In 1795 there was brought from Warsaw to St. Petersburg the famous Zaluskii collection of books and manuscripts. To this other collections were added, especially that of Dubrovskii gathered at Paris during the Revolution. With these books and manuscripts on hand it was necessary to make a home for them. In this way it came about that the Imperial Public Library was officially organized in 1811, and three years later was opened to the public. Since that time one or more copies of every book published in Russia are deposited here. From time to time special collections are added. It is said this library ranks third in the world.

The library is divided into three principal sections and these again are subdivided. There is the section of foreign books, the section of Russian books, and the manuscript section. Manuscripts are classified as to language and subject; those written on history in Russian are kept apart from other manuscripts on the subject in other languages. This however is not true without exception, for there are several collections which have not been distributed, and one finds in them all subjects and languages. There is a printed catalogue for the French manuscripts, but for all others there are only handwritten catalogues, either in book form or in loose leaf, and not always easy to read. There is no index. It is necessary to work through pages and pages of this handwritten catalogue to learn that there is no material there for American history. It has been assumed by some American scholars that the Zaluskii and Dubrovskii manuscripts have much material relating to America. This is not so. These collections have been broken up and the manuscripts combined with others according to language and subject.

- 1805, 1806, 1811. Qpx. No. 1. Five parchment pages on which are indicated the transactions of the Unalaska station of the Russian American Company.
1816. Q IV. No. 297. Historical Sketch of the Russian American Company ; brief account of the fur-trade in Alaska from 1745 to the organization of the company and from that date to 1816.
- 1824-1881-1912. No. 29. A few documents from the archives of the Russian American Company, nos. 512, 525, and 526. The great mass of the material was used by the committee appointed by the government to liquidate the affairs of the Russian American Company. 350 ff.

The four documents which follow were once a part of the Dubrovskii collection and relate to Canada :

- French Q IV. No. 43. Mémoire du Canada. A history of Canada from 1745 to about 1770. 137 ff.
- French F II. No. 31. Vol. 3. Mémoire sur les ordonnances en général fait par ordre de Mr. Colbert. Mémoire sur les Cures de Québec.

IMPERIAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

DEPARTMENT OF MANUSCRIPTS.

In the Academy as in the Imperial Library books and manuscripts are divided into two sections, a Russian and a Foreign. All the manuscripts indicated below come from the Russian section. Although the Academy was founded in the time of Peter the Great, the Department of History made its first notable progress after the middle of the eighteenth century, largely through the efforts of Müller and Fischer, and much material was then brought into the Academy which became the nucleus of later collections.

ARCHIVES IN MOSCOW.

MOSKOVSKII GLAVNII ARKHIV MINISTERSTVA INOSTRANNIKH DEL.¹

(MOSCOW PRINCIPAL ARCHIVE OF THE MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.)

Before the time of Peter the Great the direction of foreign affairs was in the hands of a bureau known as Posolskii Prikaz (Bureau of Embassies). This body was also in control of many administrative matters purely domestic. Its records therefore are valuable for both foreign and domestic history as far back as the sixteenth century. The men appointed to watch over these papers were called "diaks". They were required to keep inventories, and many of these have come down. Nearly all the buildings of the seventeenth century in Moscow were of wood, and in these the records, packed in boxes, were kept. As a result fires and floods caused much destruction.

In his reforms Peter did not forget the cause of learning. In 1700 he ordered that the more important foreign treaties should be transferred to safer quarters. When he transformed the Posolskii Prikaz into a College of Foreign Affairs and removed it to St. Petersburg he did not disturb the records but provided for their care. In 1720 he appointed a trained "archivist", the first to bear that title in Russia, and instructed him to catalogue and classify the papers, and look after their preservation. He also created a special institution, the Chancellery of the College of Foreign Affairs at Moscow, to watch the archives and keep them in order. This new institution was a part of the college and subordinate to it. While Peter lived all went well, but after his death interest in the work was lost. The archive at Moscow was regarded as a sinecure and old and incapacitated officers of the college were dumped there. Not only had nothing been done about classifying and arranging the old material, but the new records received equally little attention. Being located near the river Moskva, the archive building was flooded with every great rise of that stream, and as a consequence many of the documents were totally destroyed.

This was the situation when Catherine II. came to power. She very soon turned her attention to the needs of the archive. In 1766 she selected Gerhard Friedrich Müller as director and four years later bought for his use the Galitzin Palace for an archive building. Müller began to put the archive in order and during his connection with it much was accomplished, not only in classifying and cataloguing but also in publishing documents.

After Müller's death three of his staff, Sokolovskii, Stritter, and N. N. Bantysh-Kamenskii, carried on the work very much along the lines laid down by their teacher. It was during the administration of the last-named that the cataloguing of the archive was finally completed. When Romanzoff became chancellor he encouraged the efforts of the archivists and made personal contributions of money towards publishing diplomatic papers and chronicles.

In 1832 the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was once more reorganized. The archives at Moscow were designated as the Principal Archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and placed as before under the ministry. Since that date the administration of the archive has not been greatly modified.

¹ Those desiring more detailed information on this archive will find a very interesting account in French under this title: Les Archives Principales de Moscou du Ministère des Affaires Étrangères (Moscow, 1898). See also J. J. Chimko and L. M. Batiffol, "Les Archives de l'Empire Russe à Moscou", in Revue Historique, XLIV. 56-68.

The papers are divided into diplomatic and non-diplomatic. They are again subdivided into (1) Ancient, which means up to 1700; (2) Old, 1700 to 1762; (3) New, 1762 to 1801. Altogether there are about a million documents. This material is in many languages and is classified mainly according to countries, as Grande Bretagne, France, etc. There are no indexes and it is not easy to find one's way. There may be much more material for American history than is here indicated, but there is no system by which this may be determined.

LETTRES DE CABINET.

1774-1799. No. I. For the year 1775 there are two letters, George III. to Catherine II. and her reply, relative to securing Russian troops for American service.

MINISTÈRE.

1781-1786. No. II. Bundle 2. In this carton there are many references to America in connection with the efforts made by the empress to bring about peace between England and those who were fighting against her. There is also a great deal of material on the Armed Neutrality.

1783. No. II. Bundle 1. Two protocols of conferences with the envoy of the United States, Francis Dana.

1784. No. 4. Bundle 1. États-Unis d'Amérique. Correspondence between Osterman and Dana.

ADMINISTRATION PAPERS.

1811. No. I., 1, 1811-1812. Emperor recognizes, Apr. 14, 1811, Francis Dana as consul at Archangel.

1811, July 11. Emperor orders Pahlen to be transferred to Brazil.

1811, July 16. Dashkov to be made minister to the United States.

1811, July 17. Samuel Hazard is recognized as American consul at Archangel.

1812, Feb. 7. Projet de lettre à Monsieur de Bentzon, Agent de la Compagnie Américaine de Fourrures.

LONDRES III.

(Despatches from the Russian Minister in London to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in St. Petersburg.)

1773-1775. For the years 1774 and 1775 there are many references to America. (Russian.)

1776-1777. A large part of the correspondence deals with American affairs; the hiring of foreign troops; copies of contracts between England and the German princes. (Russian.)

1778. Contains material on American history of not much importance. (Russian.)

1779, 1780, 1781, 1782. These four cartons also have material on American history and the Armed Neutrality. (Russian.)

GRANDE BRETAGNE.

(Correspondence between the English Minister in St. Petersburg and the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.)

1772-1778. No. IV. For the year 1778 there are papers which show that England sought an alliance with Russia, but not to affect the American colonies.

1779-1786. No. IV. Many references to America and the Armed Neutrality.
 1787-1793. No. IV. Here and there a reference to America.

FRANCE.

(Notes of the French Minister in St. Petersburg to the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.)

1776-1782. No. 4. Bundle 2. America referred to a number of times, especially in connection with the question of mediation for peace.

ARCHIVE OF PARISIAN MISSION.

1778, 1779, 1783. Bundles 65, 69, 70, 79 contain material on America.

1788. Bundle 89 has papers on Paul Jones.

A number of other cartons relating to England and France for the period of the American Revolution have been examined without anything of value being found for American history.

VOORUZHENNUI NEITRALITET.

(Armed Neutrality.)

1780. Division IV. Three cartons containing documents, in different languages, on the Armed Neutrality, some of which have been published.

MOSKOVSKII ARKHIV MINISTERSTVA IUSTITSII.¹

(MOSCOW ARCHIVE OF THE MINISTRY OF JUSTICE.)

This archive is the oldest and most valuable for the internal history of Russia. It consists of three sections. The principal collections composing them were brought together in 1852.

The First Section contains the papers of: (a) the Rossiadnii Prikaz (or Archives of the Bureau of Military and Civil Affairs); (b) the Malorossiiskii Prikaz (Bureau of Little Russia); (c) the Sibirskii Prikaz (Siberian Bureau); (d) several other bureaus and institutions.

The Second Section, Gosudarstvennii Arkhiv Starikh Diel (or Archives of State), contains the papers: (a) of various central bureaus; (b) of the Senate; (c) of various "colleges" or ministries; (d) of various other institutions, central and provincial, commissions, and the like.

The Third Section contains papers: (a) of the Pomiestnii Prikaz (or Bureau of Domains); (b) of its successors, the Votchinai Kontora, Collegia i Departament.

In 1866 a decree was issued transferring to this archive all the papers, down to 1800, of the various institutions (courts of justice, etc.) which had been suppressed in 1864, excepting such as were designated to be destroyed.

The archive building at Moscow is one of the best in Russia and the conveniences for study are excellent. A number of helpful catalogues have been published and others are in course of preparation. For American history there is very little and that little is on Alaska.

¹A brief but good description of this archive in French is in the Revue Historique, XLIV. 56-68, the article by Chimko and Batiffol already mentioned.

ARCHIVES OF THE BUREAU OF MILITARY AND CIVIL AFFAIRS.

When in the fifteenth century the Moscow princes had become strong with large territorial possessions they organized, for the purpose of effective government, the Bureau of Military and Civil Affairs. At the head of it were powerful nobles, who in turn appointed the officers of the provinces. These officers (voevods) had large powers, yet certain matters they had to refer to the home office. They also had to make detailed reports on their districts. This bureau also looked after military matters. In this way many valuable papers, among others those relating to Siberia, have been gathered into this archive. In 1711 the bureau was abolished and its functions were distributed among the newly organized colleges. The documents, it seems, were kept in the Senate. When the French soldiers were quartered in the Senate building in 1812 they threw out such bundles of papers as interfered with their comfort, and in this manner many were destroyed.

ARCHIVES OF STATE.

This institution was created by Catherine II. in 1782, at the time of the reorganization of the administrative system. Instead of having separate depositories, the newly created commissions sent their records to this central archive. In addition this archive has the papers of the College of Economy, an old institution antedating the eighteenth century, which looked after the church lands and property; there are even many charters from the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.

DIELA PRAVITELSTVUIUSHCHAGO SENATA.

(PAPERS OF THE RULING SENATE.)

- 1731, 1732. Special no. 14, general no. 664. Documents dealing with explorations in the North Pacific from the early part of the eighteenth century until about 1740. 300 ff.
- 1732, 1733. Special no. 16, general no. 666. These documents are on the same subject as the preceding. Both bundles have valuable scientific material, such as lists of books taken by scientists, reports by these men, instructions as to how to make scientific observations, as well as data from the navigators, etc. 600 ff.

There is good reason for thinking that there is still other material on Alaska which is tied together with other papers and difficult to locate.

ARCHIVE OF THE BUREAU OF DOMAINS.

In Russia, as elsewhere in Europe, the rulers rewarded their military followers by grants of land, the amount varying with the rank and number of soldiers furnished. To keep account of these grants there was created, in the fifteenth century, a Bureau of Domains. Its functions were in part those of a record office, also those of a feudal court, having to decide questions of title, inheritance, feudal dues, and such like questions. In 1720 its name was changed, without however its functions being greatly affected, and under the new title of College of Domains it continued in operation until 1785. After that time all its legal power was taken from it and transferred to the regular civil courts and the college became largely a record office.

The Romanzoff Museum and the Archive of the Palace at Moscow were also searched for documents on American history, but none were found.

TAMBOV ARCHIVES.

In the archives of the Archive Commission of Tambov are a number of papers on the Russian American Company covering the period from 1819 to 1825. Through the efforts of Professor A. S. Lappo-Danilevskii on the writer's behalf the documents were sent to the Imperial Academy of Sciences, where they were examined. At the time when they were written these documents were official papers of the Ministry of Finance. They are not of great importance.

VALAAM MONASTERY ARCHIVES.

Valaam Monastery is situated on the island of Valaam in Lake Ladoga. In 1793 a number of missionaries went from here to Alaska; they arrived in 1794 and began their labors. They were the first missionaries in the Northwest, with the exception of the priest who was on board Billings's vessel. In 1894, in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Kodiak mission, the monastery published a small book giving sketches of the missionaries and the history of the mission to 1837. It seemed worth while to visit the monastery and investigate further, but a search of the archives failed to reveal any other material than that which had already appeared in print, except here and there a passage or a paragraph which had been left out because it was not altogether favorable to one or two of the missionaries.
